Tripartite on harassment issues

“The Nordic model/Nordic approach”

Different approach and responsibilities to same issue

- Central authorities:
 - Laws/acts, regulations, incentives, surveillance
- Employers organisations:
 - Support and teach members, negotiate and cooperate with t.u.
- Trade unions:
 - Support and teach members, negotiation, cooperation and advocacy

Issues on harassment are part of the general agreement in the private sector and parts of the public

The role of the trade union

Arbeidsmiljø nr. 2 - 11

Mobbing og trakassering på arbeidsplassen

- Hva kan tillitsvalgte gjøre?

- Since 2007 – an agreement at European level against harassment and violence at the workplace, framed the issue and sat the pace
- LO (the largest TU confederation in Norway) made a leaflet in 2011: “What can local union representatives do?”
- Different trade unions – different approach, but common anchoring in the leaflet

LO – have an action program

“LO is the largest confederation of trade unions in Norway”

Every form of mobbing/harassment is unacceptable:

LO points at its counterparts:

- The authorities must control the employers ability to prevent and tackle these issues,
- The employers/companies must have routines to prevent and tackle mobbing and harassment

(But accepts LO’s own duties)

Acts and regulations

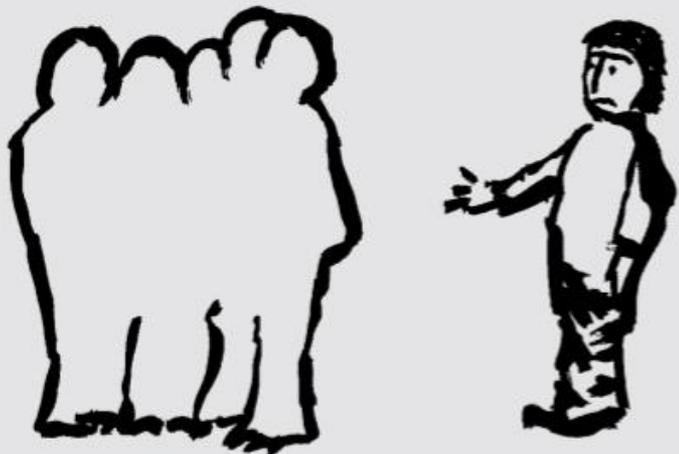

Three acts working together:

- The work environment act
- The act on equality
- The act on anti-discrimination

In common these acts condemn:

- Unwanted behaviour or actions
- The behaviour is felt to be, meant to be offensive, scaring, humiliating, troublesome, humiliating or degrading

Act on whistleblowing in 2007

General agreement in the privat sector

- Chapter § 10-1_
- An employee is entitled to refuse to work with - or under the direction of - people who have shown improper conduct or behaviour that, by the general perception in working and social life, should be required removed
- Work against mobbing/harassment is part of the systematic approach to health-, environment- and safety work

Union representatives at local level

- Unions representatives and safety representatives (ordinated according to the environmental act) are important partners to the employers work on these issues
- UR's role is to mediate, negotiate and settle agreements on actions - if members/employees find themselves exposed to mobbing/harassment
- Advocacy on safety issues

LO advises local trade unions to demand that;

- Employers should establish general rules against harassment in cooperation with union repr. Such rules will promote transparency and participation
- Work for a corporate culture where discussion and disagreements on matters are accepted, but not personal attacks
- Map risks on harassment in the work environment
- Clarify roles and responsibilities, as well as measures and solutions that can be initiated if the bullying and harassment occurs
- Establish routines to prevent and tackle harassment, routines for whistle blowing
- Train leaders and unions representatives in prevention and tackling harassment

Increased class division in the workplace

When crises comes:

- The workers that are last in – ar the first out

Where the proportion of foreign workers is high, there is a trend towards:

- increased use of temporary contracts,
- increased ethnic segregation, and a
- new form of hierarchy where Norwegian 'native' are leaders, while migrant workers perform the work "on the ground".

Low wages, unsafe conditions and heavy physical labour characterize the situation for the vast majority of Polish workers in Norway.

Violation of fundamental rights at work is a common occurrence for many.

Closing comments on social dialogue and harassment

- We can't pretend that it's not happening
- It is not the fault of the offended – harassment of a colleague is harassment of us all
- We must look, listen and talk about it
- We must work systematically with the social partners

Harassments are like Norwegian trolls – when brought up in open daylight they
